
Dani Kids and a Yellow Balloon

by David Udbjorg, ASPE

I attended a “pig feast” in a Dani village in the Highlands of West Papua and was lucky to get this shot. Normally, a photographer would leave out any distracting modern things in order to give the most authentic impression of the situation. However, the reality is that the Dani tribe lives on the border of modern society and uses modern items, such as t-shirts, flip-flops, and even cell phones—and, yes, these Dani kids are playing with yellow balloons.

(Some text redacted) Ω